5. Frequently Asked Questions Relevant to Damaged or Problem Deliveries

Walmart's official help center lists the following as standard FAQ topics directly relevant to damaged-item handling and verification (questions reproduced from the official page; answers are accessed via Walmart's interactive help center and vary by item and order context):

- What happens if my item was damaged?
- How do I know if my return item contains hazardous materials?
- Do I need to return my item with its original battery?

- Do I need to erase personal information from an electronic device before returning it?
- When will I have to pay a restocking fee?
- What if I don't have a receipt?
- What if I have a recalled item?

These FAQ entries confirm that Walmart's process explicitly distinguishes handling for damaged items, hazardous-material items, battery-containing electronics, and recalled items as separate decision paths from a standard preference-based return.

6. Special Handling Categories

Hazardous materials

Marketplace items shipped by a third-party seller that are hazmat may have special rules for returns. Some hazmat items may only be returned in stores, while others may require the customer to contact the Marketplace seller directly for mail-back instructions. By leaving a package with Walmart for FedEx delivery, the customer represents that the package contains no hazardous materials. Items considered hazmat may include batteries, flammable liquids, computer equipment, certain cosmetics, household goods, and other common products.

Electronic devices with saved personal information

For wireless phones, tablets, laptops, and other electronic devices on which personal information has been saved, customers must erase this information completely by following manufacturer instructions before returning the item.

Refund recharge for verified delivery or frequent abuse

Refunds issued for certain scenarios are subject to recharge if Walmart or the seller can verify delivery or frequent abuse. Items requiring age verification via valid government-issued identification, such as alcohol, may have a refund delay of up to ten business days if Walmart is unable to verify age or if the customer is unable to receive their delivery.

7. Marketplace Seller Returns

Items sold and shipped by a Marketplace seller may be returned within 30 days. Marketplace Sellers Return Policy details apply regarding refunds; specific return details are listed on the item's listing page.
